

Base Ball Notes.

They are giants still.

Luck doesn't seem to be coming "Old Ans." way.

Keep an eye on the Phillies. The championship is not settled yet.

Manager Hart may now look for another telegram from Director Billings.

It is "Billy" Sunday once more. Manager Sunday is a personage of the past.

Boston and New York, and Indianapolis and Pittsburg changed places yesterday.

Henry Boyle has probably lost more games in the ninth inning than any other pitcher in the League.

Revenge is sweet. On their last trip West the Senators lost four games in succession at Indianapolis.

Arthur Irwin told an Indianapolis reporter that within three years he expected Washington to have a pennant-winning team.

The "king of short stops" has a son. The heir apparent was born in Wheeling, W. Va., on Sunday. He has already been signed by the Indianapolis club, upon the recommendation of Captain and Mrs. Glasscock.

Whittaker, one of the pitchers of the Baltimore Baseball Club, has been released. He has declined an offer from the Louisville Club and will remain in Baltimore for the present.

Galvin was one of the subjects at a test of the Brown-Sequard elixir at a medical college in Pittsburg on Monday. If there still be doubting Thomases who concede no virtue to the elixir, they are respectfully referred to Galvin's record in yesterday's Boston-Pittsburg game. It is the best proof yet furnished of the value of the discovery.
